

ABSTRACT

A dual-sided semiconductor device is formed on a wafer with a resistive element that is formed through the wafer. By forming the 5 resistive element through the wafer, a resistive element, such as a large resistive element, can be formed on the wafer that requires very little silicon surface area.